Miner energy has grown rapidly in the United States (above left) especially over the past few years when it has accounted for the greatest increase in electricity generation capacity. Due to low natural gas futures, high coal prices, and continued development of renewable energy technologies, the growth of wind power (right) and solar energy could be highly competitive over the medium term. The Western States, especially California and the mountain regions, have the greatest potential.